From Promotion and Tenure Policies and Procedures, Part 1, Section 7:

NONINTERFERENCE IN THE DELIBERATIONS

The foregoing policies and procedures try to ensure that candidates for P&T are periodically provided with information about their case, while simultaneously guaranteeing candid discussions at all levels of review. Unfortunately, there have been instances of attempts to sway a decision on behalf of a particular candidate, through telephone calls to or the solicitation of appointments with various administrators or individual faculty members of review committees, urging a particular position in a given case and seeking specific information at an untimely point in the process. It is patently unprofessional for a candidate, advocate, or opponent of the candidate to engage in this kind of activity, and it is equally unprofessional for any person on a review body or an administrator to divulge confidential information. Nor should persons involved anticipate the release of information before the case has been properly acted upon in the promotion and tenure process. Aside from potential questions of legal liability, the greatest danger of such attempted persuasion is that it could affect a case negatively.
