CURRENT RESEARCH: Multi-faceted investigations of the audio-visual content and political impact of television newscasts and situation comedies broadcast over the air, on cable, and on the Internet. Research on mass media information processing with special focus on the role played by visual images. Continuing research on the effects of mass media information on political learning, public opinion, election politics, political institutions and public policy. Analyses of the impact of the World Wide Web on politics. Analyses of organizational communication in the public sector, especially in administrative agencies.
