Introduction and Questions

Globalization has been arguably the academic, policy, and journalistic buzzword since the early 1990s. As we have entered the 21st century, the literature on globalization has flourished into diverse and complex perspectives, formulations, and findings. This research seminar aims to make some sense of this literature, albeit in an inevitably selective way. We will begin by tackling a set of conceptual, theoretical, and analytical questions such as: 1) How to explicitly conceptualize globalization? 2) What are the competing scholarly perspectives on globalization across disciplines? 3) What are the empirical evidence and manifestations of globalization? 4) What are the main sources of and impediments to globalization? 5) To what extent is globalization a desirable process leading to generally positive outcomes and what are its downsides? The more specific topics and questions we will address included but are not limited to:

- ?? The restructuring of the global, national, and local economies with a focus on commodity chains and business networks within and across regions and localities.
- ?? The changing meaning and functions of international borders and more intensified transnational migration in the contexts of the EU, the Asia-Pacific transborder subregions, and the aftermath of 9-11.
- ?? The increasing sociospatial differentiation in and economic transformation of cities in a global context and communities and neighborhoods within them.
- ?? The simultaneous co-existence of and tension between global cultural convergence and the persistence of national and local cultures with a comparative focus on new trends and practices in consumption.

Requirements and Grading

Your grade for the seminar will be based on three components/activities. The first is a pair of short essays of 4-5 pages, each of which will count 15% for a subtotal of 30% of your overall grade. The second and more demanding written requirement is a research/writing project of approximately 15-18 tightly argued and reasoned pages for 45% of your grade. I expect you to turn in a one-page statement of plans for the long paper after the mid-semester, to use the second short essay to help you develop the final research/writing project, and to update me on your progress toward completing the final project through the end of the semester. I will talk and work with you individually in developing your individual paper as the semester goes by. The third and final activity requires each of you to prepare for and lead the discussion on a piece of reading each week coupled with your additional participation and performance in discussions. This will account for the remaining 25% of your total grade. Your sustained and engaged discussion of the reading material is critical to the overall success of the seminar and your individual benefit from it.

Readings

1. James Mittleman. The Globalization Syndrome, Princeton University Press, 2000.
2. John Rapley. Globalization and Inequality: Neoliberalism's Downward Spiral, Lynne Rienner, 2004.
3. Xiangming Chen. As Borders Bend: Transnational Spaces on the Pacific Rim, Rowman & Littlefield Publishers, 2005.

These three books can and must be purchased at Chicago Textbook Inc. on Taylor Street. A set of journal articles and book chapters to be read and discussed (denoted by the stars) are available in a folder outside of my office in Suite 4150. I strongly encourage you to make copies of these articles for yourself as we go along. If you want to take an article to read it elsewhere, you must return it within two hours so that the next person can have access to it.
