

A DIALOGUE WITH THE “FED-UP-HONEYS”

MAKES ME MAD!

Challenging stereotypes of young women of color using participatory action research

Thursday, February 1, 2007
6:00pm — 8:00pm

Jane Addams Hull-House Museum
University of Illinois at Chicago, 800 S. Halsted

Fed-Up-Honeys began in 2002 when six womyn ranging in age from 16-22 with different opinions and different ethnic backgrounds came together as the focus of a research project on the lives of young womyn in New York city.

Members of the NYC based Fed-Up-Honeys research team will discuss the project "Makes Me Mad! Stereotypes of young urban womyn of color" and the importance of engaging young people as 'agents of change' in their home communities and schools :

Indra Rios-Moore, was born and raised on the Lower East Side of New York. In 2003, she graduated from Smith College with a Bachelors degree in American Studies and a minor in Spanish.

Caitlin Cahill is currently an assistant professor of Community Studies at the University of Utah. Her work focuses upon young people's well-being, racial equity, urban restructuring, critical race and feminist theory, participatory action research approaches, and social justice.
